Describe present and historic physical appearance.

The store conforms to the general description under property type "Commercial Buildings" and property subtype "Retail Store." A central entrance provides access to the second floor. This entrance is flanked by two storefronts, each with its own double door entrance. A two-story porch extends across the main (south) facade and continues along the west facade. The second floor sash windows have two-over-two lights. The first and second story walls are weatherboard. The gable wall surface is covered with decorative shingles and is fenestrated with two sash windows with six-over-six lights. Arched panels are located above these two windows. A covered passage at the northeast corner of the building connects it to the office, located just to the east.

The office also conforms to the general description under property type "Commercial Buildings" and property subtype "Retail Store." It is currently in use as a residence. Interior alterations are unknown. The exterior retains its original appearance.

State significance of property, and justify criteria, criteria considerations, and areas and periods of significance noted above.

The store is significant as an example of late nineteenth century commercial architecture and for its economic and social importance to residents of St. Helena Island. The Corner Store was built c. 1877 by James Ross Macdonald, a businessman from Rhode Island who moved to St. Helena Island in an effort to improve his health. Macdonald and his business partner George Wilkins established Macdonald, Wilkins, and Company, a firm which operated the store and was the major sources of sea island cotton shipped from St. Helena. Macdonald's store, located near the center of the island at a place historically known as the Corner, sold provisions to the islanders, most of whom were black. The Corner Store, by virtue of its location and Macdonald's prominence, became one of the major centers of commercial and social activity on St. Helena. Many Macdonald, Wilkins, and Company employees lived in rooms on the second floor, above the store. One of the early official post offices for St. Helena Island was also operated in the Corner Store. An informal post office had been at Frogmore Plantation for many years and the first formal post office on the island was located at the Waterhouse Store, also at the Corner. The Corner's present official name of "Frogmore, South Carolina" comes from the name to this post office.(1)

The office, built c. 1905, is significant as an example of early twentieth century commercial architecture and for its association with the firm of Macdonald, Wilkins, and Company. This building served an office for Mark D. Batchelder, a junior partner of Macdonald, Wilkins, and Company. Near the end of the nineteenth century Macdonald, Wilkins, and Company added to its firm Mark D. Batchelder and William Keyserling. This office was built directly beside the Corner Store and was subsequently attached to it by a covered passage. The building may at one time have been used as an informal bank.(2)
