Altamaha Town
Beaufort, SC

Narrative Description

The location would have been important to the site's Yamasee inhabitants (c. 1695-1715). Archaeological evidence indicates that the site was occupied by Native Americans intermittently from at least 1,500 B.C. to A.D. 1715 based on various pottery types recovered during testing and excavations. The site contains at least two pre-Yamasee period burial mounds, and one of those (Hasell Point Mound, 38BU20) is on the National Register. At present, there is no evidence that mound was used or modified by the Yamasee who occupied the site, so it is considered a non-contributing structure for the purposes of this nomination.

The land in question was granted to Governor Robert Johnson in 1732, but due to a prior grant, the tract was ultimately given to Richard Lambton. Gabriel Manigault acquired the property in 1752, but records do not reveal how the land was used or how long the Manigault family retained ownership. In 1842, Nathaniel Heyward purchased the tract from William Smith, and Mr. Heyward established a plantation on his new acquisition. At Heyward's death, ownership of the property returned to the Manigault family and remained with them until it was purchased by Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Field of Chicago as part of their Chelsea Plantation. The 600-acre parcel containing the remains of Altamaha Town was purchased by the present owners from the Field estate in 1988.

Altamaha Town was the head town of the Lower Yamasee Towns. Altamaha Town was definitely located on the nominated tract from 1707 to 1715, and it may have been located there as early as 1695 (see Multiple Property Documentation Form for discussion of Yamasee migrations). The location of Altamaha Town was first identified in the summer of 1989 through the use of contemporary plats, other documents, and archaeological survey. Mapping and systematic testing was conducted intermittently during the latter half of 1989 and the winter of 1990, and the site was more intensively investigated during the summer of 1991 with a Survey and Planning Grant from the South Carolina Department of Archives and History (DePratter 1992).

The archaeological research at Altamaha Town revealed that the town was not a compact, easily defensible community as might be expected, but was instead a village composed of dispersed households spaced seventy-five to one hundred meters apart over an area covering as many as 125 acres. During the 1991 field season, three household clusters were identified and tested (see attached map—XUA, XUB, and XUD), but these clusters represent less than ten percent of the approximately forty houses that were once present in Altamaha Town. Work in these clusters during the summer of 1991 focused on recovering a sizeable sample of Yamasee pottery for use in identifying other Yamasee sites and to determine the state of preservation of the archaeological remains on the site. Approximately eighty-five one meter squares and sixty shovel tests were excavated.

This work indicated that household clusters were approximately thirty to forty meters in diameter with little or no cultural material present in the intervening space. Features relating to the Yamasee occupation were encountered beneath a twenty to thirty cm thick plowzone, but only one feature—a hearth—was excavated.

At present, the total Yamasee occupation area at this site is not known. The parcel being nominated includes an unknown fraction of the total site area.
Dense woods and the wide separation of Yamasee household clusters will make precise delineation of site boundaries difficult, although future research will attempt to identify site limits. Identification of site boundaries is further complicated by prior site usage. The area to the west of the nominated tract contains evidence of a slave settlement and other features believed to be associated with the Heyward plantation. Some portions of this plantation period occupation have been disturbed in the recent past by unknown individuals, and the combination of plantation occupation and site looting may have obscured the Yamasee households in that area.

At the time the site was occupied by the Yamasee, the village may have covered 125 acres and included forty households. Construction type of Yamasee houses in currently unknown. Household clusters may have included outbuildings (sheds, smokehouses, etc.) and outdoor activity areas (pottery firing, hide processing, etc.). Areas around individual structures should contain evidence of all aspects of Yamasee daily life.

Narrative Statement of Significance

Altamaha Town was the head town of the Lower Towns of the Yamasee. The chief of Altamaha Town is mentioned in numerous contemporary documents as being one of the most important individuals among the Yamasee during the entire thirty years represented by their presence in South Carolina.

The history of the Yamasee occupation in Carolina is given in the Multiple Property Documentation Form and the accompanying nomination for Pocosabo Town. Because the background history and significance for Altamaha Town is identical to that of Pocosabo Town, that information will not be repeated here.
