STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Colonel John Stuart was appointed the King's Superintendent of Indian Affairs for the Southern District in 1762. By 1765 he obtained full imperial status for his department and was active in handling the Indian affairs of East and West Florida. In 1770 he was named "councillor extraordinary" to advise the governors of Virginia, the provinces and their boards on Indian affairs.

Stuart was arrested early in June 1775 on the charge of attempting to incite the Catawba and Cherokee in the British interest. He fled from Lady's Island, South Carolina, to Florida, where he remained until his death on March 25, 1779, at Pensacola.

John Stuart built the three-story frame structure about 1772. Used as a private residence, the house is not open to visitors.

History

John Stuart was born in Scotland around 1700 and came to America about 1748. In 1757 he was commissioned a captain in the South Carolina Provincials. In 1762 he was appointed Superintendent of Indian Affairs for the Southern District, with a salary of 1,000 pounds and 3,000 pounds for Indian presents and other expenses. At first he was without definite powers and a staff, and he was subservient to the governors, who had largely handled Indian affairs themselves. Following the proclamation of 1763, he became responsible to the secretaries of state in England, though still cooperating with the governors and commander-in-chief. In 1765 he obtained full imperial status for his department and was active in handling the Indian affairs of East and West Florida. In April 1770 Stuart was named "councillor extraordinary" to advise the governors of Virginia, the provinces and their boards on Indian affairs. Thus he was able to extend his influence widely.

Early in June 1775 his arrest was ordered by the Assembly of South Carolina on the charge of attempting to incite the Catawba and Cherokee in the British interest. He fled from Lady's Island, South Carolina, to St. Augustine, Florida, where he arrived on June 21, 1775.
