DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This rectangular brick structure was built in 1726 for Christ Church Parish, which was established in 1706. Originally, double entrances were placed in the north and south walls, each door being flanked by two windows to the west and one to the east. The east and west walls each contained three evenly spaced windows. Construction was a continuous process, and before the Revolutionary War several additions and alterations were made. The chancel was added to the east wall in 1732 and the two flanking windows closed. In 1741 the south entrance was bricked up, and a few years later the middle window of the west wall was converted to a door, which has served as the main entrance ever since. The church was burned by retreating British soldiers in 1782.

The solid brick walls survived the fire and restoration of the interior, roof, and woodwork was undertaken in 1787. It was then that the first cupola was added. The north door was retained in this reconstruction, however, and was not converted to a window until 1835 when a new cupola was erected, the exterior and interior walls rough-cast, and other interior renovations performed.

Towards the close of the Civil War a company of Union Cavalry used the church as a stable and the interior was wrecked. All that remained were four walls and a roof. Basic repairs, such as a new wooden floor, and new doors and windows which are still present, were completed in 1874. The double door is paneled and the windows sashed. At that time there were three windows in the south wall and four in the north. Over each window and the door were placed semi-circular recessed fanlights. Further improvements were made in the early 20th century. In 1915 the barrel vaulted ceiling was stripped of plaster and recovered with pine board and the beams which extend the width of the church were replaced. The stainedglass window in the chancel was obtained as a gift in 1917. A gift of $5,000 in 1924 coupled with federal reparations awarded in 1915 allowed many repairs: the roughcast done in 1835 was scraped away and replaced by a cement plaster; the interior walls were replastered; the church doors were shortened to open onto the raised wooden floor and the outside sandstone steps added; the hipped roof was covered with tin; the eaves were extended with boxing; and repairs and additions were made to the cupola.

In 1961 the wings were added on each side of the chancel as a sacristy and a rector's office. The eastern-most window in the south wall was converted to an interior door, retaining the fanlight. The corresponding window in the north wall was retained but was closed off by the presence of the northern wing.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Political and Religious Significance:

In colonial South Carolina, the Anglican Church's importance was more than religious. Interwoven into the development of South Carolina, the church was also important politically and socially.

The Church Act of 1706 was one of the most significant laws in South Carolina legislative history. That act designated the Church of England as the Established Church of South Carolina and also allowed dissenters to become eligible for all political offices. The crucial non-ecclesiastical aspect of the Church Act was more important politically, however, for it provided for the creation of ten parishes and churches which were in reality units of government.

Christ Church was one of the ten original parishes established in 1706, and as such served as the center for administration of local government. Proclamations and public notices were read in the church and government advertisements were placed on the church door. Vital statistics such as births, baptisms, marriages, deaths, and burials were entered upon the official church registers. The parish church also served as an election precinct for coastal and Low Country representation in the colonial and state legislatures until 1865. Local policy and administration of parish funds, comprised of donations and property assessment taxes, were conducted by the parish Vestry and Wardens, who were elected officials compelled by law to meet four times a year.

Among distinguished parish and Vestry members of Christ Church were Charles Pinckney, state governor, U. S. Senator, and U. S. Minister to Spain; and Thomas Lynch, Jr. and Edward Rutledge, signers of The Declaration of Independence.

Architecturally, Christ Church is representative of the continuous ingenuity displayed by a rural community in keeping its religious center operative. The original early colonial architecture has been adapted several times as the result of numerous events in the church's long history which have necessitated reconstruction and improvement, but essentially its colonial architectural integrity has been maintained.
