DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Situated on a hilltop in the rolling piedmont section of South Carolina, the city of Chester has a large collection of mid-nineteenth century buildings. The public square on top of the hill has been the center of town activity since its beginning in the 1780's. The majority of the buildings now standing are nineteenth century. The Romanesque City Hall-Opera House, completed in 1891, dominates the skyline and can be seen from every approach to the city. The Confederate monument, a tall obelisk, stands at the eastern end of the square. The beautiful 1855 Greek Revival Courthouse is on the northeastern slope of the hill. Gadsden Street flows down the hill toward the east and is lined with many nineteenth century buildings.

Business activity, which once flourished on top of the hill, has sharply declined. Some of the old buildings are in need of paint and repair; however, they remain structurally unchanged and of pleasing design. With a proper plan for paint colors, sign designs, and street lights, the business area could be attractively restored. City council has acquired extensive parking areas immediately behind the buildings on either side of the hill and on the southern side of Gadsden Street.

1. Old Chester Hotel Building. Northside of Main St., facing Public Square. Very possibly the oldest commercial building in Chester. Mentioned in court records in 1854, but may be as early as 1840. Large three story brick building covered with stucco. Dentil trim and molded garlands and diamond design adorn the frieze. First Courthouse of 1788-1796 believed to be on this site.
2. Davega Building. North side of Main St., facing Public Square. Constructed between 1843 and 1863 by N. R. Eaves. Three story brick structure of extremely plain design. Wooden lentils with dentil trim enhance the building. Now occupied by Strickland & Hardin, attorneys, and Dr. Frank Payese.
3. Chester County Courthouse. Main St. on northeastern slope of hill, just off the Public Square. Completed in 1855. Grey stucco building with columned portico.
4. Wilson Building. Southern side of Main St., facing Public Square, built in 1873. Large two story brick building covered with grey stucco. Simple arched windows edged with egg and dart design at second level. Four adjoining commercial buildings also built in spring of 1873. All of them retain original windows and ornamentation. In some instances street level store fronts have been altered, but upper levels are unchanged. The Wilson Building at one time housed the large mercantile establishment, S. M. Jones Co. Now occupied by Hattie's Book & Gift Shop and Emory's 5 & 10¢ Store.
5. Chester City Hall. Southern side of Main St., facing Public Square. Built 1890-91 as a town hall and opera house. This Romanesque brick structure was the center of cultural activity for many years. Pre-cast (see continuation sheet Item 7)

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

In the 1750's settlers from Pennsylvania came into the Chester County area looking for good grazing land for their cattle. The counties of Chester, York, and Lancaster were named for the Pennsylvania counties from which these settlers came. By the 1780's the Chester area had grown enough to need a courthouse of its own. Before that Camden had served the district. The village of Chester grew up around the courthouse which was located on top of the town hill.

Architectural Significance. There is a high concentration of 19th Century buildings on the town hill and the streets leading to it. The residential area encompasses a variety of architectural designs. Two designs found most often in early Chester homes, the unadorned two story farm house and the tall two story house with double gallery front portico, are represented by several examples.

Political Significance. In 1807, Aaron Burr, former Vice President of the U. S., was a political prisoner being taken to Richmond to stand trial. He made an attempt to escape in Chester, calling upon the local citizens to come to his rescue. The rock upon which he stood to make his plea is on the sidewalk on the southern side of the Public Square.

Samuel McAliley, State Senator from Chester, cast the only dissenting vote against calling the Secession Convention whose Ordinance of Secession led to the Civil War. His brick store building still stands.

The oldest signer of the South Carolina Ordinance of Secession was John McKee of Chester, merchant and maker of grandfather clocks.

It is said that Andrew Johnson, seventeenth President of the U. S., was for a short time apprenticed to a Chester tailor, Alexander Hogge, and that he worked for Hogge at his shop near the present Courthouse.

Military and Transportation Significance.

As a railroad center, Chester was an important town during the Civil War. During the last months of the Confederacy, many important leaders found their way to Chester. The railroad had been destroyed beyond Chester. Generals Wheeler, Hampton, Chesnut, and Hood were in Chester at this time, as well as Governor McGarth and Major Mosley. The ladies of Chester organized groups to care for the wounded soldiers who arrived by train throughout the War. Fifty-five headstones in Evergreen Cemetery mark the graves of soldiers who died in Chester.

The Constitution of the Confederacy was rescued in Chester. It is now on display at the University of Georgia. (see continuation sheet Item 8)

8. SIGNIFICANCE. (continued)

Commercial Significance. As a courthouse town for a farming area, Chester has served and is serving as a market for the surrounding countryside. During the 1870's and well into the twentieth century, two large "time stores" stood side by side on the top of the hill. These buildings still stand, their exteriors relatively unchanged. With proper restoration the commercial district of Chester's historic area will once again be the center of commerce.

Theatrical Significance. The City Hall-Opera House was the scene of many traveling shows, as well as local talent productions. Plans are in the making for a complete restoration of the theatre.

Literary Significance. Mary Boykin Chestnut, wife of General Chestnut, was a refugee in Chester in March and April of 1865. Part of her popular Diary from Dixie was written during her stay in Chester.
