 Washington County, South Carolina
 county and State

The Paul H. Rogers House is located at 628 West Home Avenue in Hartsville. Constructed in 1927, it is an excellent example of the Colonial Revival style. This house is also representative of residences in Hartsville associated with the community's industrial, commercial, and civic leaders.

This two-story frame residence has a rectangular plan, with a five-bay facade, a hip roof, and a one-story stoop with iron balustraded balcony, supported by two Tuscan columns, at the central entrance. The symmetrical five-bay facade has six-over-six windows with louvered shutters, and the central entry features a single-leaf six panel door with fanlight and sidelights. The second story features a four-part Palladian window above the balcony which further contributes to the Colonial Revival character of the residence. One-story porches with Chippendale balustraded balconies are at the left and right elevations; the porch on the left elevation has been enclosed to create a sunroom, while the porch on the right elevation is supported by two pairs of Tuscan columns. The main block of the house, porches and front stoop feature a full entablature with stylized Gothic motif and guttae. The recent addition of vinyl siding over the weatherboard has not obscured significant architectural elements or otherwise significantly altered the appearance of the residence.

Rogers, Paul H., House
name of property
Darlington County, South Carolina
county and State

The Paul H. Rogers House is significant as an excellent example of Colonial Revival residential architecture and for its association with Paul H. Rogers (1883-1960), prominent Hartsville industrialist and businessman who served as president of Carolina Fiber Company and as mayor of Hartsville.

The house was built in 1927 for Rogers and was designed by architect Franklin Gordon of Charlotte, North Carolina. Paul Hamilton Rogers, nephew of James Lide Coker (1837-1918), graduated from the University of North Carolina in 1905 and moved to Hartsville to work for his uncle at Carolina Fiber Company. Rogers gradually took responsibility for the business operations of the company, with his cousin James Lide Coker, Jr., (1863-1931) in charge of engineering and production. He became president of Carolina Fiber in 1931 at the younger Coker's death, overseeing the company's operations during the Depression and diversifying its production to include the manufacture of nine point board, the corrugated cardboard forming the middle sheet of three-ply cardboard used in shipping boxes. He served as president of Carolina Fiber Company until ill health forced his resignation in 1939; the company merged with Sonoco Products Company in 1941. Rogers later served as president of the Carolina Paper Company in Columbia and the Fort Sumter Paper Company in Charleston. He served Hartsville in civic affairs as well, as mayor from 1921 to 1929 and as a trustee of the Hartsville school board from 1930 to 1939.¹
