Representation in Existing Surveys Inventory of Hisotric Places in South Carolina (1979 update)

Description: Built ca. 1885 by Newberry attorney Lambert W. Jones, this large asymmetrical Victorian residence is a two-story weatherboarded dwelling with front and left side ornamental wraparound porch on the lower story. Two high twin front gables extend from a rectangular block. The gables have cornice returns, narrow four over four single windows and a "stick" like motif above the windows. Bracketed and turned wood posts, connected by a plain railing, detail the narrow one over-one lights. (See photo #13). Later additions, harmonious to the original fabric, extend from the rear facade.

Significance: This building with its unusual front gable motif is the only house in Newberry to display the "stick" influence of the period. The house commands a spacious lawn and broad side yard and is the visual vocal point of that portion of East Main Street where it is situated. It was purchased in 1898 by Ike Reighley, whose descendants still own and occupy the house.

Acreage: .6
