NARRATIVE DESCRIPTION OF RESOURCE

Bridge Abutments, HS-10

Four pair of earthen bridge abutments located along a road trace [REDACTED]. The abutments vary in size from 5-to-10-feet high and 10-to-15-feet wide. Wood structural bridge ties are extant on the southernmost set of abutments. The abutments are severely eroded because of seasonal flooding; the resource's primary significance is as an archeological site with the potential to yield information about the history of agricultural settlement in the Congaree Swamp.

NARRATIVE STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Bridge Abutments are significant under the context "Agricultural Settlement in the Congaree Swamp: 1740-1900" established in the National Register of Historic Places Multiple Property Documentation Form for the Historic Resources of Congaree Swamp National Monument. Beginning in 1730, small farmers moved into the back country of South Carolina to find fertile farm land and to create "buffer zones" between the back country and the more densely populated coastal area centered around the city of Charleston. After the end of the Cherokee War in 1761 and the establishment of the state capital at Columbia in 1786, wealthy planters moved into the Congaree River valley to introduce the plantation system to the region. Utilizing existing Native American trading paths, settlers built roads and ferries across the swamp to provide a means of transporting produce and livestock to markets in cities such as Charleston. These abutments may be the remains of a bridge associated with a road and ferry system constructed by Isaac Huger in the 1780s.

The abutments are significant at the state level under National Register criterion D for their ability to yield information about settlement patterns in the region.
