DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Begun about 1801, this painstakingly crafted mansion took 7 years or more to complete. Constructed of bricks handmade in the area, walls 18" to 36" thick. Pedimented entrance portico with fanlight; second floor balcony. American Gothic or "tied" chimneys at each end of gable roof. Hand-carved woodwork includes two rare bowed mantels. The entrance portico was added in 1845, the porches about 1915.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Located at the intersection of the old Pinckneyville and Georgia roads, a well-traveled stage route, Foster's Tavern has been a historic and architecturally unique upcountry landmark for more than 150 years. Not only is it an imposing reminder of stagecoach days, but its association with such nationally prominent leaders as John C. Calhoun and Bishop Francis Asbury also add to its historic significance.

The tavern was a favorite stage-coach stop for South Carolina's famous Senator Calhoun (the southwest corner room on the tavern's second floor is traditionally called the John C. Calhoun Room; other guests always moved out when Calhoun stopped here on his travels between Columbia and Fort Hill). In an 1810 diary, Bishop Asbury, who founded Methodism in South Carolina and was one of the first two Methodist bishops in the United States, mentions that "We breakfasted with kind and attentive Anthony Foster and continued on to Robert Haile's."

Unique in both its architectural design and its brick construction, which was rare in the upcountry, Foster's Tavern is a valuable part of Spartanburg's visual history. It was built by Anthony Foster and appears on the Robert Mills map of 1825.

7. (continued)

According to Spartanburg, South Carolina, architects Ray Lillard, A.I.A. and Carlisle McGarity, A.I.A., Foster's Tavern is also noteworthy for the following reasons: original pine floors on two upper floors; all woodwork original, including eight mantels and chair-rails in most rooms; fluted door casings; original window frames and sills (one replacement only) with original blown glass panes in many; soapstone hearths; wide, heart-pine treadboards on stairs; hand-shaped stair hand-rail and newel posts all the way to third floor and put together with wooden pegs. Outstanding scroll-work (hand-carved) on stair stringers; exquisite fan-shaped window over front door; beautiful hand-carved, panelled wainscoting in two rooms on right of downstairs hall. Original plaster throughout made with cattle hair. Pintels which held original outside shutters still on windows.

There is still no central heating in house - grate fires only.

This house is a gem. The exterior and interior of the house are as original as any 170-year old house could be which has been occupied continuously since its construction.
