DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Exterior: Built in 1850, Holy Cross Episcopal was designed to resemble an Old World Parish Church. Of Gothic Revival design, constructed of yellow pisé de terre (rammed or packed earth). The stuccoed walls are over 40 feet in height. The roof is of high-pitched red tile. A corner tower and pointed arches are also a part of this cruciform structure.

Interior: The walls are stuccoed but are painted gray to give the appearance of stone. Bohemian stained glass windows, designed by Violett le Duc, are placed over the altar and on the west end of the church. The design of the windows over the altar are of figures, such as Peter, whereas those on the west end represent the more conventional aspects of the Church, such as the chalice. A wooden altar, carved walnut pews, and a tracker-type organ are also in the church. The organ made by Henry Irwin, is one of the few still in existence. The floors of the church are tiled.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Holy Cross Episcopal Church, located in Stateburg, South Carolina is a major example of architecture produced during the antebellum period of American history.

Architecture: Edward C. Jones, designer of the Holy Cross Episcopal Church was one of the best known South Carolina architects of the antebellum era. (His designs date from c. 1848-1861). Located in Charleston, his office was the training ground for such architects as Francis Lee (later a partner), Louis Barbot, and John Devereux. Although structures such as Richard Furman Hall at Furman University and Trinity Methodist Church in Charleston are still in existence, much of Jones' work has been destroyed.

Holy Cross Episcopal Church is considered by many as Jones' most unusual design. Resembling an Old World Parish Church, this cruciform structure is a notable example of Gothic Revival. It was built in 1850, constructed of yellow pisé de terre - earth packed between wooden molds, tamped, and left to dry until it becomes as hard as baked brick. Walls constructed of pisé de terre (minimum depth of 13 inches) are almost impervious to earthquakes. They may crack but will not collapse. Holy Cross Episcopal is significant in that it, along with various other structures in Stateburg, comprises the largest complex in the United States of pisé de terre buildings.

Religion/Philosophy: Serving as a religious center for over one hundred years, Holy Cross is actually the second church on the site, having replaced a frame structure built there when the parish was incorporated.

Science: Buried in the graveyard of Holy Cross Church is Joel Poinsett, member and organizer of the S. C. Board of Public Works, U. S. congressman, minister to Mexico, Secretary of War, and first president of the National Institute for the Promotion of Science (forerunner of the Smithsonian Institute). An opponent of Calhoun's "nullification policy," he is probably best remembered for bringing the poinsettia flower to this country from Mexico.
